POSITION ANNOUNCEMENT
Fish Culturist, Port Graham Hatchery

Closing Date: June 14, 2019

CIAA has an opening for a Fish Culturist at Port Graham Hatchery, located in Port Graham, Alaska. Port Graham Hatchery rears pink salmon for release within the Cook Inlet. Port Graham Hatchery offers a unique experience in a stunning location. Remote village life is coupled with unbeatable views and outdoor opportunities that provide fulfillment on and off the clock.

Job description:

This is a full-time, year round, salaried position. Under the supervision of the Hatchery Manager, the Fish Culturist performs a variety of duties including broodstock collection, spawning, incubation, and rearing of pink salmon. Other duties include but are not limited to maintenance of the hatchery grounds and equipment, responding to alarms, leading technicians and maintaining records.

Qualifications:

Ideal candidates will have previous experience at large-scale production salmon hatcheries along with basic construction and maintenance techniques, proficient boating skills, general knowledge of mechanics, and experience developing spreadsheets and collecting data. Candidates must be eager to learn, have a positive attitude and strong work ethic, and be willing to lead technicians on a daily basis. Operating hatchery equipment and understating water and alarm systems is required in this position. Successful candidates should be critical thinkers and problem solvers with the ability to adapt to challenges remote hatcheries face daily.

Compensation:

Annual salary begins at $38,437. The benefit package includes health insurance, Health Savings Account with employer contribution, employee 401(K) retirement plan, and vacation and medical leave. Onsite housing and utilities are provided.

If you believe you meet the qualifications above, and you are looking for a fun, challenging, and rewarding job, then CIAA encourages you to apply. CIAA is an equal opportunity employer.
